

ITALIAN SOLDIERS BADLY GENERALLED

Near Being a Serious Disaster.

MEN SHORT OF AMMUNITION

Reconnaissance of 2,000 Battled for Life While 50,000 Stood Idle in the Camp.

ROME, Jan. 5.—The Socialist Deputy deputy, who is acting as war correspondent for the Messaggero of Rome and comments rather unfavorably on the so-called victory of Bir Tobras on December 19.

"It is quite true," writes Signor De Gandia, "that in this unexpected battle only about ten men and that our soldiers were so small that out of eighty battled fully thirty-five were slightly wounded, while the enemy had 500 men and an equal number of wounded."
"What I cannot understand is why 50,000 men were not sent to fight the Arabs and Turks concentrated at Bir Tobras when over 50,000 men were available at Tripoli."

"It is indeed painful to think that the small column under the command of Col. Fara was practically abandoned in the desert and not sufficiently supplied with ammunition. Our poor soldiers, surrounded on three sides by all the enemy's forces, were compelled not to use their arms for lack of ammunition."

"Some of the soldiers said to me: When we saw the enemy in the encampment, although we were almost exhausted after nine hours of hard marching, we did not hesitate attacking the position. We succeeded in dislodging the enemy, and then we realized that we had not sufficient ammunition and the commander ordered us to form a square and retreat. In order to defend themselves the soldiers had to make use of the cartridges which they removed from the ribbons of the quick firing guns. Only the marksmen fired. All the others stood and helped when they could relaying their comrades' rifles."

"Col. Fara saved his column from being completely routed. If, in view of the overwhelming superiority of the enemy and the scarcity of ammunition, Col. Fara had ordered his men to retire and fall back at Ainara, the retreat would have been eased into a rout and the day would have been one of great mourning for poor Italy."

"It seems to me that the Commander of the forces was seriously to be blamed. When so many men were available it was not logical to send out only a small column to face the enemy. Besides, it should have been foreseen that the enemy would be able to bring in great force and Col. Fara should have had more artillery instead of only two mountain guns. If Col. Fara had had two batteries he could have easily inflicted a severe defeat on the enemy. Instead he lacked sufficient ammunition for his two mountain guns and he was compelled to cease fire in order to keep the last sixty shrapnels as a last resource. Col. Fara despatched an orderly officer to Ainara with the following message:

"Engaging enemy great numerical superiority. Hope to get through with the forces under my command." The message was sent at 10:30 A. M.
Col. Fara said he hoped to get through and yet no reinforcements were sent to him despite the fact that six hours passed without news and he was only ten miles away. Toward 4 o'clock other soldiers arrived at Ainara from Col.
Fara, who asked for reinforcements and ammunition.

"After two long hours a brigade under the Major, consisting of three infantry battalions and two batteries of mountain artillery, left Ainara. This brigade was in the desert for two miles when the General decided to halt and wait. At 6 in the morning the General in command at Ainara marched to the rescue of Col. Fara with four battalions of infantry and two batteries of mountain artillery. Those reinforcements never reached Bir Tobras, but met Col. Fara's column at 7:30 in the morning marching toward Ainara. Col. Fara's men were exhausted when they returned to Ainara at 10. It is not true that the Arab troops who guided the Italians to Bir Tobras purposely caused them to lose their way in the desert, as they guided the wounded back to camp and they instead from the very beginning that the General assembled in great force at Ainara and suggested that more men should be sent out."

"Signor De Gandia hopes in concluding his comments that 'in future the officers in command will be of equal value to the soldiers in their orders.'"

"Several discoveries of great archaeological importance have been accidentally made by the Italian soldiers at Ainara.
About five miles from the Italian camp at Tripoli, where two large ancient monuments in an admirable state of preservation as well as the remains of a human temple built under the Empire, were discovered. The secretary of the Italian Society of Christian Archaeology, who recently made public another discovery at Ainara which is of the utmost importance. Some time before the Italian occupation of Tripoli Dr.
Ameghino discovered a Christian church consisting of an open area surrounded by a wall of the fifth century and some far over sixty tombs have been found. These tombs are built of stone and bricks faced with mortar, on which are inscriptions in Latin have been scratched.
The tombs have been discovered as well as the formulas taken from the liturgy.
It seems to be no doubt that this church was built from the fifth century and that it was situated in an open space, as it was found to be a flourishing Christian colony existed in North Africa at that time."

THE GERMAN REICHSTAG.
Specialized Reporters, Politicians and Dramatic Debate.

The present Parliament building of the German Government were designed by the architect, but no provision was made for the members of the National Council or upper house were utilized, and the most spacious gallery in Europe.

Council are quite as luxurious as the members of the Reichstag themselves. The government provides telegraph, telephone, books, papers and other facilities.

The members of the Reichstag enjoy an extraordinary privilege that is in strong contrast with the members of the National Council. The desks in the gallery are close together and allow for gestures while talking. The members are followed by a string of university degrees. They sit to the right of the Speaker in spectacular array and remind one more of Supreme Court Justices than newspaper men. The reports of the Reichstag are closely to routine and follow a narrative form, with a rare use of the colloquial quotation marks.

They are usually censored before being disseminated.

An American who visited the Reichstag recently and took pains to arrive before the opening of the day's session, says in the National Magazine:
"The members came in one by one, and the ushers, who were rather impressive personages in dress suits with a single epaulet worn on the left shoulder, showed unfailing courtesy and deference as they distributed papers and letters."

"The various political parties were seated together. On the extreme left of the chamber were the Socialists, an intelligent and aggressive looking lot of men, all wearing their hair pompadour. Some of the clerical delegates wore the garb of priests."

"To the right of the Speaker's desk were the members of the press, and in the platform at the left were the seats for members of the National Council or upper house, who are privileged to come in at any time and to inter-polate any suggestions that may occur to them during the discussions."

"The Reichstag sessions progress in much the same order as those of our House of Representatives, although I missed the chaplain's prayer. There is little excitement except on the occasions where there is an outburst on the Socialist side, which might perhaps be compared to insurgency in its most violent form."

"Little speaking is done from the desks—the orators march to a box pulpit under the Speaker's chair and deliver their addresses with pomp and solemnity. Reichstag reports seem to lack the liveliness of American colloquy. Scant attention is paid to oratory—German legislation is a drowsy summer day with a filibuster aloft."

"One speaker had held the floor more than half an hour when an attendant whispered something in his ear; the bell rang and the chair admonished him that he had drifted away from the matter under consideration and must confine his remarks to the subject before the House. When this tranquility of German legislative meetings was mentioned to a Reichstag member, he replied: 'I am not interested in proceedings. Long into the night, after adjournment, the naval questions are under discussion in the cafes and press headquarters.'"
